Woman in Mind, seen at the Vaudeville Theatre, London in 1986 with Julia McKenzie and Martin Jarvis, is one of Alan Ayckbourn's blacker comedies, dealing with the gradual mental collapse of a woman, Susan—a collapse which appears to be precipitated by being knocked unconscious by a garden rake. Starved of affectionate companionship and understanding love by an appallingly boring husband and a priggish son who's ashamed of her, Susan conjures up an ideal family who come to her in her idyllic (also imagined) garden. But gradually she begins to lose control over these idealized people and their visitations, until finally she breaks down completely in a nightmarish and climactic fantasy involving her real and imaginary families.
